Dear Charley:

In connection with the general subject of "Red Dot" tests, the company has been conducting local experiments with a small plane but find that photographic weather is locally far from optimum.

The question has been asked of me and, therefore, I must ask it - has the Project any small aircraft, or could they obtain control of such an aircraft, which has a "hole in the bottom" (i.e., a window or opening through which photographs could be taken) which could be based at EAFB?

Incidentally, is interested in the results of our work.

I would like a reply to quote, although my personal feelings can stand any reply.
